In Syria, the family is at the heart of almost every part of society. The extended family is the centre of economic and social life, with parents, children, grandparents, aunts and uncles and others often living together, or in the same town or village. As well as living together, extended families sometimes work together and often spend much of their leisure time with each other. This is especially true in rural areas, although some extended families break up when some of the younger members move to the cities to find work. They generally live in nuclear families, consisting of only parents and their children. Although things are gradually changing in Syria, extended families still give support to all their members, especially the very young, the very old and others who cannot look after themselves.
